

Story Of An Employee

There is politics in the offices. How Can
My Senior Talk To Me Like That. I Will Resign From My Position.

After Receiveing Resignation - The Employer said

‘What will you do, if your father will scold you the same way your senior did? Will you leave the house?’

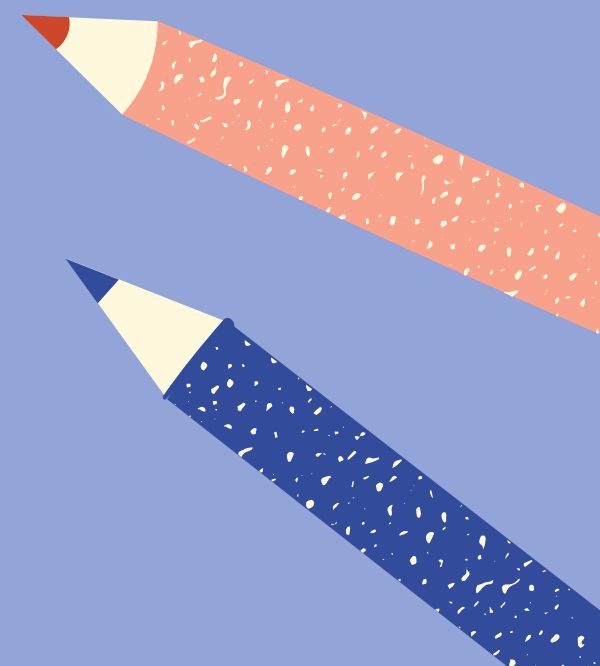

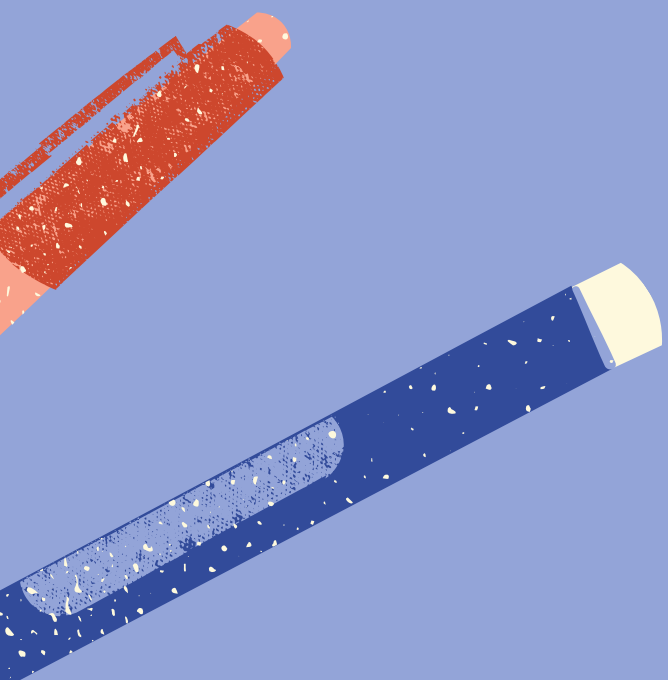

The Answer Was Obvious - No

With confusion, the employee stood still on his decision to resign, but right after a few minute conversations with the business coach, he changed his decision.

Wanna know
why?

Business Coach Ritu Singal explained to him some business and job advice that helped him change his thoughts toward business and job ethics. She explained that politics is not in the offices, it's our mind that keeps this filter of office politics and hierarchy. Even if anybody feels the power of a senior, one should adore it and enjoy the learning process. She said, 'A wall is made up of bricks, similarly an office is a wall whose bricks are its employees, and making a place in that office wall being the strong brick depends on an employee'

Lesson Of The Story

Leaving the place is never a solution, fighting with the situation is. Every day, a lot of people go through this phase of resigning their jobs because of many reasons. It can be work stress, strict boss issues, work conflicts, time management, etc.

If you think, your job is not good or you want to change your job, one must keep one thing in mind that all the offices have a different working process and culture. You Will Have To Learn To Co-operate With The Situations
